Appendix 1 Words that go together

As well as explaining the meaning of a word, Oxford Wordpower also shows you how to use it correctly in a phrase or sentence.

The example sentences

Do we talk about weak cheese or mild cheese?

Do you say a joke or tell a joke? (It's mild and tell.)

If you look up a word in the dictionary, the example sentences show you which other words are often used with it:

Write out and cash are verbs that are often used with the word cheque.

cheque (US check) /tʃek/ noun [C,U] a piece of paper printed by a bank that you can fill in, sign and use to pay for things: She wrote out a cheque for £20. • I went to the bank to cash a cheque. • If there is no money in your account, your cheque will bounce (= your bank will not pay it). • Can I pay by cheque?

Strong, high, cold and north are adjectives that are often used with the word wind.

wind¹ /wmd/ noun 1 [C,U] (also the wind) air that is moving across the surface of the earth: There was a strong wind blowing. • A gust of wind blew his hat off. • high winds • a cold north wind

Practice 1

Match a word in A with a word in B.

Find the words in B in the dictionary and look at the example sentences.

Practice 2

What's the opposite of ...

a weak tea?
b curly hair?
c dark skin?
d calm sea?
e a high salary?
f heavy traffic?
g a mild curry?
h an even number?

Prepositions and verb patterns

The dictionary also shows you which preposition to use after a noun, verb or adjective, and which construction to use after a verb:

This shows that the preposition that goes with married is to.

You can say that you enjoy something or that you enjoy doing something.

married /ˈmærid/ adj 1 married (to sb) having a husband or wife: a married man/woman/couple o They've been married for nearly 50 years. o Shula's married to Mark. o

Appendix 2 Modal verbs

Modal verbs are used with another verb to express possibility, probability, obligation, etc.

The modal verbs can, could, may, might, shall, should, will, would and must are followed by an infinitive without to: I can swim. These verbs do not change in form (i.e. they have no -ing, -ed or -s forms) and form questions and negatives without do:

'Can you hear me?' 'Yes, I can.'

Here are some examples of the use of modal verbs:

Ability

can could be able to

Can you ride a bike?

He has been able to swim for a year. The fire brigade were able to rescue the children.

The fire brigade couldn't rescue the children.

I could run four kilometres without stopping when I was younger.

One day people will be able to travel to Mars.

She could have passed the exam if she'd tried harder.

 Look also at manage and succeed.

Obligation

must have (got) to

I must go to the bank today. We have to give in the essay on Friday.

She had to wait for him.

We will have to ring up.

He didn't have to go to hospital. The test was done at home.

• Look also at need and suppose.

Duty should ought to

The police should do something about it.

You shouldn't leave children alone.

You ought to visit your grandparents more often.

She oughtn't to make private calls in work time.

I shouldn't have gone to bed so late. I felt very tired the next day.

I ought to have helped.

Permission can could may

Can I go now, please?

You can't go swimming today. I need you to help me at home.

Books may only be borrowed for two weeks.

May I use your phone?

Could I possibly borrow your car?

Prohibition may not must not

You may not take photographs in the museum.

Cars must not park in front of the entrance.

• Look also at allow and let.

Recommendations and advice must ought to should

You really must see that film. It's wonderful.

What ought I to say to him? You ought to read this book.

You ought to have come with us. It was great!

He really shouldn't work so hard. He looks exhausted.

Requests can could will would

Can you help me?
Could you open the door, please?
Will you sit down, please?
Would you come this way, please?

Suggestions and invitations shall would like

Would you like to come with us? Shall I carry that for you? Shall we go out for a meal today?

Look also at let.

Possibility can could may might

I can catch a bus from here.
She could be famous one day.
Couldn't you come earlier?
I could have left my bag in the bank.
You may be right.
They may have forgotten the meeting.
William might be upstairs.
She might not come if she's very busy.

Probability

can't must ought to should will

You can't be hungry – you've just eaten.

If I'd known the film was about

Wales, I might have watched it.

He couldn't have known that. Have something to eat. You must be hungry.

I must have left my book at home. It must have been a great shock for you.

That car must have been doing 100 miles an hour!

She ought to pass her test. She drives well.

I bought four bottles. That ought to have been enough.

He should have arrived by now. I'll ring and check.

That will be the postman.

Appendix 3 Phrasal verbs

Phrasal verbs are verbs that consist of two (or three) parts – an ordinary verb and another word (or words) like in, for, or off. They are very common in English. Here are some examples:

lie down give up look for get on with

Some of them are easy to understand (you can guess the meaning of lie down if you know the words lie and down), but many phrasal verbs are more difficult because they have special meanings (you cannot guess that give up smoking means stop smoking even if you know the words give and up).

If you want to find a phrasal verb in the dictionary, look under the first word (to find give up, look under give). The 'phrasal verbs' section comes after the ordinary meanings of the verb.

Practice 1

(for, of, with)

Use the dictionary to complete these sentences with the correct word.

- h Can you write ......... your address and telephone number, please? (down, up, in)

Now turn the page upside down and check your answers.

The four types

There are four main types of phrasal verbs:

1 Phrasal verb without an object

The fire went out.

My car broke down on the motorway.

In the dictionary these verbs are written like this:

go out break down

- 2 Phrasal verbs that can be separated by an object
- a If the object is a noun, it can either go after both parts of the phrasal verb, or between them: She tried on the red dress.

  She tried the red dress on.
- b If the object is a pronoun, it must go between the two parts of the phrasal verb:

She tried it on.

(NOT She tried on it.)

In the dictionary this verb is written like this: try sth on. When you see sth or sb between the two parts of the phrasal verb, you know that they can be separated by an object.

3 Phrasal verbs that cannot be separated by an object

The two parts of the phrasal verb must go together:

John's looking after the children. (NOT-John's looking the children after.) John's looking after them.

(NOT John's looking them after.)
In the dictionary this verb is written like this: look after sb. When you see sb or sth after the two parts of the phrasal verb, you know that they

4 Phrasal verbs with three parts

The three parts of the phrasal verb must go together:

cannot be separated by an object.

I can't put up with this noise any longer.

In the dictionary this verb is written like this: put up with sb/sth. Again, when you see sb or sth after the three parts of the phrasal verb, you know that they cannot be separated by an object.

Practice 2

Complete these sentences by putting the word it in the correct place. In each sentence you will have to leave one space empty.

- a You must be hot with your coat on. Why don't you take ...... off ......?
- b If you don't understand this word, look ...... up ...... in your dictionary.
- c He's had a big shock, and it will take him some time to get ...... over .......
- d I was going to do my homework last night, but I'm afraid I didn't get round ...... to ........
- e I thought you'd read the newspaper, so I threw ...... away .......

Appendix 5 Word formation

When you find a new word in English, what do you do? Look it up in a monolingual or a bilingual dictionary? Ask a teacher or another student? Try to predict the meaning from the rest of the paragraph – the context?

There is another way to try to simplify difficult words. Often, long words are made from shorter words that you know, combined with a few letters added to the beginning (a prefix) or to the end (a suffix). Look at the prefixes and suffixes (in dark type) above. They can all be used with many other words, so when you know their meaning, you have the key to a large number of new words.

- 1 How many sides has an octagon?
- 2 If 1991 was the bicentenary of Mozart's death, in which year did he die?
- 3 Which word is a monosyllable? but although however
- 4 Does a multi-storey car park have more than one floor?

prefixes that tell us about numbers. A word that begins with bi- shows that there are two of something. A bicycle has two wheels (but a tricycle has three).

Numbers Many common words have

Words for measurements are often made with the prefixes cent-, kilo-, etc. 100 centimetres = 1 metre, 1 kilogram = 1000 grams, and so on.

- 5 If a house was built in the postwar period, was it built before or after the war?
- 6 Would a woman go to antenatal classes before or after her baby was born?
- 7 If your teacher told you to rewrite your essay, why would you be angry?
- 8 Which flies faster than the speed of sound, a subsonic plane or a supersonic plane?
- 9 Is a micro-organism a very large or very small creature?
- 10 How do you feel if you have overeaten very full or still hungry?

Time A number of prefixes are connected with time, for example pre-(before) and ex-(former). A pre-arranged meeting was arranged beforehand. A divorced man might talk about his exwife. The ex-president is no longer president.

Size and degree Some common prefixes tell us 'how big' or 'how much'. A word that begins with maxi- is large or the greatest; mini- refers to something small (e.g. mini-skirt, minibus).

Extra- means 'more' – extra-strong glue is stronger than usual.

11 Which of the prefixes un-, in-, im-, il-, irwould you use to make the opposites of these words?

correct certain possible regular sure legal valid relevant patient legible

Negative Many prefixes change the meaning of a word to its opposite or make it negative. A non-smoker does not smoke. The opposite of happy is unhappy. Besides non- and un- we also use in- (or before certain letters im-, il- or ir-) in this way. It is important to learn which is the correct prefix to make the opposite of a word.

- 12 Is an activity that is extra-curricular part of the curriculum of a school?
- 13 Is a flight from London to New York transatlantic?

Position These prefixes tell us where something is or happens. For example, sub-gives the idea of 'under'. A subway goes under the road. We read the subtitles under the pictures of a foreign film.

Suffixes

A suffix is added to the end of a word, and it often changes the function of the word. There is one suffix that you probably use very often: -ly to make an adjective into an adverb.

He sings beautifully. The car was badly damaged.

A suffix can also be added to a noun to make it into an adjective. You can change the noun Japan into an adjective describing the nationality of the people who live there by adding -ese: Japanese.

| Use one of the suffixes -ation, -ment, -ness to make nouns from these verbs and adjectives: develop kind arrange imagine happy organize                                                                                  | To make nouns that describe a state, an action or a quality you can add a suffix such as -ation, e.g.: inform + ation $\rightarrow$ information examine + ation $\rightarrow$ examination                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

Appendix 6 Punctuation

full stop

A full stop (.) (US period) is used at the end of a sentence, unless the sentence is a question or an exclamation:

We're leaving now. That's all. Thank you.

It is also often used after an abbreviation:

Acacia Ave.

a.m.

Walton St.

Note that in email addresses, this is said as dot: www.oup.com = double-u, double-u, dot o-u-p dot com.

74

question mark

A question mark (?) is written at the end of a direct question:

'Who's that man?' Jenny asked. but not after an indirect question: Jenny asked who the man was.

exclamation mark

An exclamation mark (!) (US exclamation point) is used at the end of a sentence which expresses surprise, enthusiasm, shock or horror:

What an amazing story! How well you look!

Oh no! The cat's been run over!

or after an interjection or a word describing a loud sound:

Bye! Ow! Crash!

comma

A comma (,) shows a slight pause in a sentence:

I ran all the way to the station, but I still missed the train.

Although it was cold, the sun was shining.

He did, nevertheless, leave his phone number.

However, we may be wrong.

It is also used before a quotation or direct speech:

Fiona said, 'I'll help you.'

'I'll help you', said Fiona, 'but you'll have to wait till Monday.'

Commas are also used between the items in a list, although they may be omitted before and:

It was a cold, rainy day.

This shop sells newspapers, magazines and books.

In relative clauses, commas are used around a phrase which adds some new, but not essential, information. Compare the two sentences:

The boy who had lots of sweets gave some to the boy who had none. The boy, who had lots of sweets, was already eating.

We cannot understand the first sentence without the information introduced by who. However, in the second sentence, the phrase who had lots of sweets only adds extra information and is kept separate from the main part of the sentence by commas.

colon

A colon (:) is used to introduce something, such as a long quotation or a list:

There is a choice of main course: roast beef, turkey or omelette.

semicolon

A semicolon (;) is used to separate two contrasting parts of a sentence:

John wanted to go; I did not.

or to separate items in a list where commas have already been used:

The school uniform consists of navy skirt or trousers; grey, white or pale blue shirt; navy jumper or cardigan; grey, blue or white socks.

Appendix 6

apostrophe

An apostrophe (') shows either that a letter is missing, in short forms such as:

hasn't, don't, I'm, he's or that a person or thing belongs to somebody:

Peter's scarf Jane's mother my friend's car

With some names that end in s. another s is not always added:

Charles' book

Notice the position of the apostrophe with singular and plural nouns:

the girl's keys

(= the keys belonging to the girl) the girls' keys

(= the keys belonging to the girls)

quotation marks

Quotation marks or inverted commas ('' or "'') are used to show the words that somebody said:

'Come and see,' said Martin,

'Oh, no!' said Martin. 'Come and see what's happened.

Angela shouted, 'Over here!'

or what somebody thought, when the thoughts are presented like speech:

'Will they get here on time?' she wondered.

They are also used around a title, e.g. of a book, play, film, etc:

'Pinocchio' was the first film I ever saw.

'Have you read "Emma"?' he asked.

hyphen

A hyphen (-) is used to join two words which together form one idea:

a tin-opener a ten-ton truck or sometimes to link a prefix to a word:

non-violent anti-British and in compound numbers:

thirty-four seventy-nine

You also write a hyphen at the end of a line if you have to divide a word and write part of it on the next line.

901

dash

A dash (-) can be used to separate a phrase from the rest of a sentence. It can be used near the end of the sentence before a phrase which sums up the rest of the sentence:

The burglars had taken the furniture, the TV and stereo, the paintings - absolutely everything.

or you can put a dash at the beginning and the end of a phrase which adds extra information:

A few people - not more than ten had already arrived.

A dash can also show that the speaker has been interrupted in the middle of a sentence:

'Have you seen -' 'Look out!' she screamed as the ball flew towards them.

brackets

Brackets () (or especially in US English, parentheses) are also used to keep extra information separate from the rest of the sentence:

Two of the runners (Johns and Smith) finished the race in under an hour.

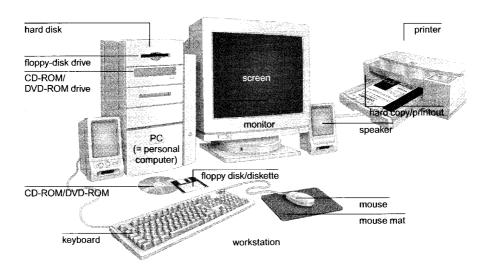

Numbers or letters used in sentences may also have a bracket after them or brackets around them:

The camera has three main advantages: 1) its compact size 2) its low price and 3) the quality of the photographs.

What would you do if you won a lot of money?

- (a) save it
- (b) travel round the world
- (c) buy a new house
- (d) buy presents for your friends

Appendix 7 Computers

Computers

A computer can store and process information. This information is called data and can be words, numbers or graphics. To process data, the computer uses a program, which is a set of instructions stored on the computer's hard disk.

To input data, you can enter it using the keyboard. If you want to store this data, you save it into the computer's memory and you can make a backup copy or print it out by connecting the computer to a printer. Large amounts of information, such as encyclopedias, can be stored on a CD-ROM.

Possible problems:

- the computer won't let you log in/on
- you can't save your work
- -a bug in the program
- a virus on the network
- the computer crashes
- --- spam

On the screen, icons, which are arranged in a row on a toolbar, and menus show you what programs and data are stored on the computer and what jobs the computer can do. You use the mouse to click on an icon and tell the computer what job you want it to do and to move to the part of the screen you want to work on. The cursor shows your position on the screen.

Computers can be connected to other computers to form a network. This allows different people to have access to the same information and to communicate with each other using email. To communicate with someone using email, you send your message to their email address.

Can I email you?

Do you have an email address?

My email address is warnerd@iet.co.uk (warner d at i-e-t dot co dot U-K) /ˌdɒt ˈkəʊ dɒt ju:ˈkeɪ/

The Internet or the Net is an enormous network that covers the world. People who want to make information available to the whole world can pay for their own space on the Internet. This is called a website. The Web or the World Wide Web (WWW) is the system which lets you download information from the Internet. You can use a search engine to enter keywords and find all the websites that have information about a subject. For example, if you want to write something about the environmental problem of water shortage you can key in the words 'water' and 'shortage' and find websites about the problem. This is called surfing the Net. Online services are ones that are available on the Internet. If you know the address of a website you can go directly to it. An example is http://www.oup.com (double-u double-u double-u dot o-u-p dot com). A website can contain many web pages. The first page is called the home page and it often has a list of answers to FAQs (frequently asked questions).

Emails

Informal emails are often short messages between colleagues or friends. Formal emails can be similar to formal letters without addresses. You do not have to use a particular formula at the end – you can just sign your name. Use the subject line to say what your message is about. Use cc if you want someone else to read the message. An email address is written like this: sam.green@bec.co.uk

It is said like this: Sam dot Green at b e c dot co dot u k

Appendix 8 Arabic words in English

When people ask in English for 'a coffee with sugar', they probably don't realize that they are using words that have come into English from Arabic. Many very common English words have their origins in Arabic.

Some of them reflect the time when Arab understanding of mathematics was foremost in the world:

| algebra | (علم) الجبر |
|---------|-------------|
|         | 0           |
| zero    | صفر         |

The names of many items in everyday use come originally from Arabic words:

| sofa     |        | كنبة    |
|----------|--------|---------|
| mattress | فَرْشة | حَشيّة، |
| cotton   |        | قطن     |

—products used as cosmetics and make-up:

| مستحضر لتجميل رموش العين mascara | "مُسْكرة"، |
|----------------------------------|------------|
| henna                            | الحنّاء    |
| kohl                             | كحل        |

— and many of the sweet things in life:

| sugar  | سحر                 |
|--------|---------------------|
| syrup  | ربٌ السكّر، ۚ قَطْر |
| sorbet | شراب                |

شجرة الخروب carob

These words became part of English many centuries ago, but Arabic words continue to become used in English. More recently, Arabic words that have become familiar in English include items of clothing:

| burka    | بُرقع |
|----------|-------|
| hijab    | حجاب  |
| keffiyeh | كفيّة |

people, especially religious leaders and teachers:

| admiral   | أميرال | أمير البحر، |
|-----------|--------|-------------|
| ayatollah |        | آية اللّه   |
| mullah    |        | ملاً        |
| imam      |        | إمام        |

and with the increasing popularity of Middle Eastern and North African food, the names of dishes:

| couscous  | مغربية، كسكس |
|-----------|--------------|
| falafel   | فلافل        |
| harissa   | هريسة        |
| hummus    | مسبّحة، حمّص |
| kebab     | (لحم) كياب   |
| tabbouleh | تبوَّلة      |
| tahini    | طحينة        |

Appendix 9 Letter writing

When you write a letter you need to think about layout, style and content.

Layout is how your letter looks on the page, where you put addresses, etc.

Style is the manner in which you write, i.e. formal or informal.

Content is what you want to say.

Letter of complaint

16 Paddington Lane Leeds LS4 7QT May 16 2006

Seaside Hotel Harbour Lane Falmouth TR12 5LB

Dear Sir or Madam

I am writing to complain about the poor service provided by your hotel, where my friend and I stayed last week.

First of all, we asked for a room with a view of the sea, but we were given a room at the back of the hotel overlooking the car park. To make matters worse, the bathroom had not been cleaned and when I reported this to your staff they were very slow to take action. Moreover, at breakfast your staff were rude and unhelpful.

As a result of all this, we did not enjoy our holiday, and we went home early.

I believe I am entitled to compensation and I expect to receive a refund of at least half our bill. I look forward to hearing from you very soon.

Yours faithfully

Elaine Thomas

PS Put this if you want to add extra information.

Dear Ginny,

How are you? Sorry I haven't been in touch for ages but I've had masses of work! My new job's going really well, though.

In fact, I'm writing to ask you a favour. I've been asked to go to a conference in Paris next month and I wondered whether I could stay with you for a couple of nights. It would be great to see you and catch up on all the news!

Hope to hear from you soon.

Love, Vicky x

Countries

| 1 | Some countries in the       |

|   | very different from the way |
|   | they are pronounced in      |
|   | Arabic                      |

2 Other countries have English names that are different from their names in Arabic.

The regions of the world where Arabs live are known as the Middle East (e.g. Egypt, Iraq, Jordan) and North Africa (e.g. Algeria, Libya, Morocco).

Cities

3 Similarly, some cities have the same name in Arabic and English.

4 Other cities have a different name in English.

Nationalities

5 The adjectives used to describe nationality in English have a variety of endings, for example:

He is Egyptian. She is Lebanese. They are Iraqi.

Often the adjective can also be used as a noun to refer to a person from the relevant country:

(adjective) an Egyptian tradition

She is an Egyptian living in London.

This is the case with all the nationality words for countries of the Arab world. As a contrast, look at the following cases where different words are needed for the adjective and noun:

He is English.

He is an Englishman.

She is French. a Spanish restaurant

She is a Frenchwoman. the Polish Government some Poles on holiday

a Spaniard from Madrid

Following is a table of nationality words for some countries of the Arab world:

| Country      | Nationality (adjective and noun)      | Pronunciation              |
|--------------|---------------------------------------|----------------------------|
| Algeria      | Algerian                              | /æl'dʒɪəriən/              |
| Bahrain      | Bahraini                              | /ba:'remi/                 |

Examples: 697: six hundred and ninety-seven

3 402: three thousand, four hundred and two 80 534: eighty thousand, five hundred and thirty-four

* You use one hundred, one thousand, etc., instead of a hundred, a thousand, when it is important to stress that you mean one (not two, for example). In numbers over a thousand, you use a comma or a small space:

1,200 or 1 200

Telephone numbers

In telephone numbers you say each number separately, often with a pause after two or three numbers:

509236 five o nine – two three six

You can say six six or double six for 66: 02166 o two one – six six or o two one – double six.

If you are phoning a number in a different town, you have to use the area code before the number:

01865 is the code for Oxford.

If you are phoning somebody in a large firm, you can ask for their extension number. Extension 4840, please.

Agnendix 12 cm. Pronuncia i on

Pronunciation

If two pronunciations for one word are given, both are acceptable. The first form is considered to be more common. A word that is pronounced very differently in American English has the American pronunciation given after a US label: address/ə'dres; US 'ædres/

/-/ A hyphen is used in alternative pronunciations when only part of the pronunciation changes. The part that remains the same is replaced by a hyphen:

attitude / 'ætɪtju:d; US -tu:d/

- /'/ This mark shows that the syllable after it is said with more force (stress) than the other syllables in the word or group of words. For example, any /'eni/ has a stress on the first syllable; depend /dı'pend/ has a stress on the second syllable.
- /<sub>1</sub>/ This mark shows that a syllable is said with more force than other syllables in a word but with a stress that is not as strong as for those syllables marked /<sup>1</sup>/. So in the word pronunciation /pra<sub>1</sub>nAnsi<sup>1</sup>e<sub>1</sub>fn/ the main stress is on the syllable /<sup>1</sup>e<sub>1</sub>/ and the secondary stress is on the syllable /<sub>n</sub>nAn/.
- (r) In spoken British English an r at the end of a written word (either as the final letter or in an -re ending as in fire) is not sounded unless another word that begins with a vowel sound follows. For example, the r is not heard in His car was sold, but it is heard in His car isn't old. To show this, words which end in r or re have (r) at the end of the phonetic spelling in the dictionary:

car/kq:(r)/

In American English the /r/ is sounded whenever it occurs in the spelling of a word.

Strong and weak forms

Some very common words, e.g. an, as, that, of have two or more pronunciations: a strong form and one or more weak forms. In speech the weak forms are more common. For example, from is /frəm/ in He comes from Spain. The strong form occurs when the word comes at the end of a sentence or it is given special emphasis. For example, from is /from/ in The present's not from John, it's for him.

Pronunciation in derivatives and compounds

In compounds (made up of two or more words) the pronunciation of the individual words is not repeated. The dictionary shows how the compound is stressed by using the marks /'/ and /<sub>1</sub>/. In 'tin opener the stress is on the first word. In 'jacket po'tato the secondary stress is on the first syllable of jacket and the main stress is on the second syllable of potato.

Many derivatives are formed by adding a suffix at the end of a word. These are pronounced by simply saying the suffix after the word. For example, slowly /'sləʊli/ is said by joining the suffix -ly /li/ to the word slow/sləʊ/.

However, where there is doubt about how a derivative is pronounced, the phonetic spelling is given. The part that remains the same is represented by a hyphen:

mournful /-fl/; mournfully /-fəli/
